Walkability Reviews

The Michigan Department of Transportation (MDOT) offers a series of walkability reviews in communities around the state, designed to teach the basic principles of walkability from a non-technical perspective.

The Walkability Reviews are designed to help local administrators, officials, engineers, planners, business owners, residents, and other community stakeholders learn the benefits of providing a safe and attractive environment for walking. Participants will learn how to identify and assess factors that contribute to walkability.

Check back for details regarding our 2016 Walkability Review training!