Maternal and Child Health Workforce Burnout Study

The information below reflects a study conducted through the Milken Institute School of Public Health at George Washington University. The survey will be open through early March. Please feel free to share this information with colleagues and partners.

Calling all Maternal and Child Health professionals working in public health, healthcare, community-based, governmental, or other organizations in the United States! The Milken Institute School of Public Health at George Washington University invites you to participate in a groundbreaking study on burnout.

Share your experiences anonymously through a quick, 15-minute web-based survey. Your insights will shape future research and programs in Maternal and Child Health and related fields. As a thank you, enter a raffle for a chance to win a $70 Amazon gift card (email optional and disconnected from survey responses). Your voice matters — join us in understanding and addressing burnout among the Maternal and Child Health workforce. Visit bit.ly/MCHburnout or see the attached to make a difference today!

Thank you,
